Boston, Feb. 23, 1847.

My Dear Friend:

It has suddenly occurred to me, this morning, that I am under an engagement to be in Weymouth, somewhere about the 1st of March — on a Sunday. I sincerely hope it is not next Sunday. If it is, and if you have not made any positive engagement for me, I hope you will make none; or, if you have made any, pray get it deferred, if you can, for one week. My reason for making this request is, the steamer is to sail for Liverpool on Monday, and I want all day Saturday and Sunday to be scribbling letters to friends in England, Scotland and Ireland. On Thursday and Friday, I have got to sit for my portrait, as well as to attend to other matters. Of course, if you have so committed me that I must come, why, then I will come. But I put myself in your hands, to dispose of me as you think proper, under these circumstances. I hope I shall be excused for one week.

I know not whether you are at home, or at New Bedford; nor is Mrs. Chapman able to inform me. If you are absent, I will thank any of the family to send me a line by return of mail.

Ever yours, faithfully,

Wm. Lloyd Garrison
